SAVE VANISHING SPECIES

BEYOND THE PERF

The new Save Vanishing Species™ Semipostal stamp is not only a compelling image, but also a powerful message of hope. The purchase of these stamps benefits conservation funds that help protect and support imperiled wildlife around the globe.

Semipostal stamps allow customers to contribute to a worthy cause, simply by purchasing postage. Each stamp is sold at a price at least 15 percent higher than the current First-Class rate, and the net proceeds are channeled to designated organizations supporting the cause.

Even though these fundraising stamps are issued infrequently — the Save Vanishing Species Semipostal is the fourth such stamp to date — the Postal Service has long used the stamp program to raise public awareness of important social issues.

Soil and water conservation, hunger, organ donation, adoption, diabetes, mentoring, Alzheimer's disease, and animal rescue are just a few of the many important causes that have appeared on stamps, and as a result, have been brought to public attention.

The Postal Service produces stamps that reflect the best of our nation — stamps that we hope you enjoy, whether in your collection or on your mail. And when stamps also support a vital cause, we hope that you participate in contributing to a brighter future.

Executive Director, Stamp Services

A self-supporting government enterprise, the U.S. Postal Service is the only delivery service that reaches every address in the nation, 150 million residences, businesses and Post Office Boxes. The Postal Service receives no direct support from taxpayers. With 36,000 retail locations and the most frequently visited website in the federal government, the Postal Service relies on the sale of postage, products and services to pay for operating expenses. Named the Most Trusted Government Agency five consecutive years and the sixth Most Trusted Business in the nation by the Ponemon Institute, the Postal Service has annual revenue of more than $68 billion and delivers nearly half the world's mail. If it were a private sector company, the U.S. Postal Service would rank 26th in the 2008 Fortune 500.

SAVE VANISHING SP

When President Obama signed the law creating a new semipostal last September, the U.S. Postal Service had 12 months to design, print, and release a stamp that would raise funds to protect vanishing species. Considering the production realities involved, one year allowed precious little time for creative decisions.

As a semipostal stamp, the project also faced unusual constraints. Semipostals sell for a higher price than First-Class stamps, with net proceeds benefiting a worthy cause — in this case, five conservation funds protecting six threatened species around the world: Asian and African elephants, great apes, rhinoceroses, tigers, and marine turtles.

Since the idea is to raise awareness and funds, the goal for semipostals is to focus public attention on a single, iconic stamp image. It would be nearly impossible to depict six animals of such different sizes on one stamp design and achieve a powerful image. So art director Derry Noyes and the Postal Service had an important decision to make: Which animal would they feature?

SPECIES: ONE FOR ALL

From an artistic standpoint, Noyes advocated using an image of a tiger — one of the more visually striking of the six animals.

However, groups outside the Postal Service had a direct interest in the stamp's design, since they would both promote the stamp and receive proceeds. To avoid the appearance of favoring one group's animal over another, one solution seemed simple: an American species on an American stamp. Out of the six animals, only the marine turtle is indigenous to the United States.

But artist Nancy Stahl, who is experienced at illustrating animal-themed stamps, recognized a possible problem. It's challenging to depict emotion in a turtle's face, which could mean fewer people would form an attachment to the stamp image.

In addition, stamp size posed a particular challenge for depicting the grandeur of marine turtles, which can weigh hundreds of pounds. "By trying to draw the entire animal," Stahl continues, "he looked like those little green turtles that you used to buy in a pet store."

As Stahl and Noyes worked to produce an attractive stamp design around the turtle, Postal Service officials met with representatives of the various conservation funds. During this meeting, the Postal Service learned something unexpected: Coalition members agreed a tiger would make the best stamp design.

"Everyone wanted the stamp to succeed because it benefits such an important cause," says Layne Owens, stamp development specialist for Stamp Services. "So when Stamp Services managers met after the coalition meeting, we unanimously agreed that we should revisit the design. We let Derry know that she could start focusing on the tiger, as she originally proposed."

"I'm not sure what happened, but I was thrilled," Noyes says, "because the tiger is a gorgeous animal."

The stamp featuring an Amur tiger cub will likely appeal to cat lovers as well as the conservation-minded. And more stamp sales means more money available for vital conservation efforts.

Net proceeds will be distributed to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to support the Multinational Species Conservation Funds. Silhouette images representing each of the animals benefiting from the funds appear in the selvage of the stamp sheet. In addition, text describing the efforts of each conservation group appears on the back of the pane.

Like all semipostal releases, the stamp will remain available for at least two years before vanishing from the market. And every stamp helps prevent the day when these species might vanish from the earth.

Learn more about the imperiled species supported by the Save Vanishing Species™ Semipostal stamp by visiting the U.S. Fish & Wildlife service website: www.fws.gov/international/semipostal.
